Description
How can America be religiously devout, religiously diverse, and religiously tolerant? When we look at other nations, or even this nation at other periods in history, religious differences have led to discord and even bloodshed. And yet the United States has a remarkably high level of religious tolerance. Indeed, this tolerance is even more remarkable in light of the divisive role religion plays in our politics. This course will first examine the many ways in which religion is interwoven into American politics. Then it will turn to trying to solve the puzzle of America’s religious pluralism—if religion is so politically divisive, why are Americans so accepting of (most) religions other than their own? And what explains the exceptions to that acceptance?

In addition to the usual readings and class discussions, this course will expose you to the diversity of religion in America. We will have visitors in class from a variety of religious traditions. As well, for one assignment you will research a faith other than your own, attend a worship service of that faith, and then write a brief paper with your reactions to the experience.

Requirements

1. Come to class
The best reason to attend each and every class is that the quality of our collective learning experience rests on the willingness of everyone to be engaged in rigorous discussion. If that is not enough of an incentive, be warned that the midterm exam will cover material from the assigned reading and the lectures. As yet another incentive, attendance will be taken periodically. Plus, on some days there will be treats.

While I do not take attendance in every class, I do reserve the right to conduct attendance checks periodically throughout the semester.

In short, come to class. Every time.
(If you really, really have to miss class, be sure to tell me or your TA ahead of time. Good reasons to miss class include a subpoena, jury duty, surgery, birth of a baby, an appearance on American Ninja Warrior—you know, important things).

2. Do the reading
Coming to class is necessary but not sufficient to succeed in this course. The assigned readings raise provocative questions, which we will discuss in class. The discussion will be really lame, however, if you have not done the reading.

In short, do the reading. All of it. Every time.

3. Do your own work
Entering Notre Dame you were required to study the on-line edition of the Academic Code of Honor, to pass a quiz on it, and to sign a pledge to abide by it. The full Code and a Student Guide to the Academic Code of Honor are available at: http://honorcode.nd.edu. Perhaps the most fundamental sentence is the beginning of section IV-B:

The pledge to uphold the Academic Code of Honor includes an understanding that a student’s submitted work, graded or ungraded—examinations, draft copies, papers, homework assignments, extra credit work, etc. – must be his or her own.

In short, do your own work. All of it. Every time.

4. Pay attention
Good citizenship in the classroom calls for everyone to devote their full attention to the lectures and ensuing discussion. That means all cell phones must be silenced during class; also, no texting, tweeting, checking Facebook, checking the price of your vintage Transformers on E-bay, playing online poker, etc. Not only is such behavior rather rude, it will cause you to miss stuff that will appear on exams and is highly distracting to your fellow students. Plus you might miss the jokes.

In short, pay attention. All of the time.

Evaluation
Your evaluation in the course will have five components:

1. Participation/Attendance (checked periodically)  10%
2. Midterm exam  25%
3. Reflection paper  5%
3. Congregational visit paper  15%
4. Candidates’ religion paper  15%
5. Final paper  30%
Participation/Attendance: this portion of your grade will be based on the periodic (unannounced) attendance checks, as well as an assessment of each student’s quality of participation in classroom discussion. Note that the assessment of participation is based on quality, not quantity—it is not so much how much you speak as whether your contributions are well-reasoned and facilitate a useful discussion. If you are uneasy or uncomfortable with speaking in class, please come and visit with me privately so that we can discuss strategies to enhance your participation.

Midterm exam: will cover material from the first half of the course. It will be done in-class, and consist of essays pertaining to the themes covered in the course to that point.

Reflection paper: a brief paper in which students will reflect on their personal opinion and experience with the mixture of religion and politics. (maximum of 750 words)

Congregational visit paper: students will attend at least one worship service of a faith other than their own and then write a paper describing the experience. This paper will also include some basic research on the congregation, its denomination, and/or its religious tradition. (maximum of 1,500 words)

Candidates’ religion paper: an opinion paper on the question of whether voters should take candidates’ religion into account when casting their ballots. (maximum of 1,000 words)

Final paper: the final assignment for the course consists of a paper on any subject pertaining to religion and politics in the US. Students are free to choose their own topic, but I am happy to provide guidance and suggestions. The paper must include an empirical component—that is, the collection of original data in some form. “Data” in this context need not be quantitative; as it can consist of personal interviews, reading archival material, tracking news coverage of a given topic, and so on. Students will submit a brief abstract describing their idea for the paper by November 20, to which I will respond with suggestions and guidance. Your paper topic must be approved by Professor Campbell. Please feel free to meet with me face to face to discuss your paper at any time during the semester. (maximum of 3,000 words)

More details about these assignments will be provided throughout the semester.

The penalty for late papers is one FULL letter grade per day. That is, an A paper handed in 1 day late will receive a B, and so on. Exceptions are only granted for truly dire circumstances. Illness, family emergencies, and the like require documentation from your rector, the undergraduate deans’ office, or a medical professional.

In addition to these graded assignments, there is one more requirement. Over the course of the semester, each student must meet face-to-face with me at least once. This meeting can be one-on-one or in a group. It can be in my office, or during one of the lunches that I will organize throughout the semester. This requirement serves multiple purposes. For one, it will facilitate discussion in class, as we will know each other a little better outside of class and thus will be more likely to engage in dialogue in the classroom. Also, it provides an opportunity for students to receive feedback on matters related to the course including, but not limited to, potential topics for the final paper.

The following scale will determine your grade:

Note that you must complete every requirement in order to pass this course.

Readings

The course uses the following books, all of which are available at the Notre Dame bookstore, or through other sources. Be sure you have the paperback edition of American Grace and the 4th edition of Onward Christian Soldiers.

There will also be a number of readings available on e-reserves (identified as ER in the course schedule). The chapters from Seeking the Promised Land: Mormons and American Politics will be available on Sakai. Other course material, including any slides shown during the lectures, will be posted on Sakai. You are thus encouraged to check Sakai regularly.

Teaching Assistant

In addition to Professor Campbell, this course employs a teaching assistant, Sam Glaser. As a PhD student in political science, Mr. Glaser is well versed in the material covered in this course. He will be available to help you prepare for exams and papers.
